

About Sue

Sue Ludwig is a speaker, author, and healthcare entrepreneur who helps professionals and leaders grow with greater clarity, intention, and sustainable impact. Drawing on decades of experience in high-stakes healthcare environments, she brings grounded insight to conversations about leadership, energy, and meaningful work.

She is the founder and president of the National Association of Neonatal Therapists (NANT), where she has helped advance one of healthcare's most specialized fields on a global level. A licensed occupational therapist and certified neonatal therapist, Sue pairs deep clinical roots with business and leadership expertise to support individuals, teams, and organizations across industries. Sue serves as the neonatal therapy media expert for the American Occupational Therapy Association and has received numerous national honors, including the Laura Edmunds Lectureship Award, the National Perinatal Association's Individual Contribution to Maternal and Child Health Award, the EntreLeadership Momentum Award, and recognition as a Graham's Foundation Resilience Honoree.

She is the author of the award-winning book

Sue lives in Cincinnati, Ohio, with her husband, a couple of dogs and she is the proud mom of two grown children.
